In Farm Shooting

These pictures show those who figured in the tragic farm shooting near Egremont Saturday in which three persons died and one other was critically wounded. Above at the left is Steve Andrewchuk, first to die in the shooting that occurred at his farm 2½ miles north of Egremont. In the center are the two Andrewchuk children. From the top down are Mary, 17, Paul, 16, who died Monday from wounds in the groin and shoulder. Peter, who escaped unhurt although fired at. Harry, 12, Victoria, 10, Anne, 7, and Elizabeth, 4. At the right is Mrs. Julia Andrewchuk, who is in a critical condition with a bullet wound in the neck. At bottom, right, is Andrew Malow, the murderer, who ended his own life in the Andrewchuk barn.

Condition of Mrs. Andrewchuk was described as "slightly improved" by the physician attending her at 2 p.m. Monday. "There has been some slight improvement but her condition is still quite serious," the doctor stated in a long distance telephone conversation with the Bulletin.

In the meanwhile the six children who survived the tragic shooting are being cared for at the Andrewchuk farm by J. Yokinos, a farmer in the Redwater district who is an old friend of the family.

Father of Steve Andrewchuk and his son Paul has been tentatively set for Tuesday at 2 p.m. in the cemetery two miles north of Opal.

With three persons already dead as the result of bullets fired by a revenge-demented farmer, physicians were fighting Monday to save the life of a fourth victim in Redway hospital following a murder and suicide on a farm 3½ miles northwest of Egremont in the Opal district about 10 a.m. Saturday.

THE present military situation in Europe would seem to substantiate President Roosevelt's statement that the Axis powers are not going to win the war. The first essential for an Axis victory is the direct conquest of the British Isles, which recedes further into the past with the passing months than an American aid to Britain increases.

As long as the British continue their vigilance unbroken, without the volume of American assistance.

A Message Of Good Cheer

While President Roosevelt's Sunday evening broadcast was addressed to the people of the United States, it is safe to say he had as large an audience of listeners in Canada in proportion to population, and that beyond the Atlantic and the Pacific his words were heard with a tenseness of interest unequalled in either of those countries. To Britain and its Allies on the fighting front they were words of inspiration and encouragement, whose worth cannot be calculated. To the Axis warmakers they were words which mayadden but which must also bring sober thoughts and may well bring misgivings.

Allies those who are fighting for national and personal freedom and those who are fighting to destroy those things heard the plainest possible declaration that the United States is on the side of the defenders and means to redouble the supplies it is sending them of weapons and ammunition and fighters to carry out the fight.

"No dictator and no combination of dictators" is to be allowed to drive the republic from this purpose. And, as President, Mr. Roosevelt called upon all factories in United States industry to put themselves into the job of producing these war needs in a volume and with a speed yet unparalleled.

To the defenders of democracy and its friends everywhere this is a message of hope and assurance that will give strength and courage. To the glum and the gloomy, it is a flung defiance they cannot ignore. The morale of the Allied people is stronger for the morale of the aggressors is weaker. Certainly be wakened. Wherever is the wide world a heart throbs with the impulse to liberty, fairness and justice there be today deep gratitude to the great speaker and his words, and a clearer confidence that these ideals shall not perish from the earth.

Bardia And Aiter

Captured Italian officers say the garrison at Bardia was ordered by Mussolini to die. It was to be a last stand. For the defenders therefore the choice was to die or to surrender. But the Italian Fascist regime was not to be taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken. The sharp decline was not taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken. The sharp decline was not taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken.

The Bardia garrison was marked for sacrifice apparently gain time for Graziani to fortify Tobruk. But the remaining forces were for a last stand. He may have the pain for nothing. The Bardia garrison was marked for sacrifice apparently gain time for Graziani to fortify Tobruk. But the remaining forces were for a last stand. He may have the pain for nothing.

The choice will therefore be with the British command whether to carry the war to Tobruk, or to consolidate the position already gained and to wait for reinforcements to complete the destruction of the enemy.

The Honor Of Japan

It will tax the ingenuity of military officers to find anything but sheer malice in the decision to attack the Japanese. The Japanese are not to be taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken. The sharp decline was not taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken.

The island of Japan is a formidable military importance. It is not even a British possession, but mandated territory. It is altogether undoubted, as all mandated territories must be, it is a possession of the Japanese. It is a possession of the Japanese. It is a possession of the Japanese.

The Negotiations

Some— a few only— members of the United States Senate have expressed the possibility of arranging a negotiated peace between the Axis powers and Britain and its Allies. The Senate is not to be taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken. The sharp decline was not taken to prove that defensive measures were being taken.

multitons. Their present position is in keeping with this background of misconception.

A negotiated peace can be made only between belligerents who each believe that the other will fulfill its undertakings. The British and Allied nations do not believe that Hitler and Signor Mussolini will do so. They are convinced they would not. This conviction is based on a ten-year record during which neither of these dictators has ever made a bargain he has not broken, and in which both of them have made many.

Do Senator Vandenberg and Senator Hugh H. Clegg believe that Hitler and Signor Mussolini will do so? They are convinced they would not. The Saturday Night Review

The test of a broadcast delivered over radio station CFRN at 8 p.m. Saturday, December 28, by The Bulletin's associate editor,

Harold L. Weir

The life of the year 1940 is moving turbulently towards its close. In this year, with all its turbulence, its threats and its dangers, the people of the British Empire can look back over a century length with considerable satisfaction.

For no matter what this fateful year may have taken in lives and property, it represents a remarkable record of conquest made by the human will and spirit over the darkest of circumstances and the most dismal of prospects.

From the triumph of a spiritual achievement and so far as we know, this has been the most triumphant year in the history of the British Empire. The year has been, of course, where the victories of the race have been more concrete and apparent. Enemies have been words which these have been enemies of the flesh. During 1940 the people of Great Britain have put behind them fear, apprehension and doubt. They have fought, they have suffered, and sudden death. In all the annals of heroism, there has been no record of conquest like this.

The British are a race reborn in fire, refined in the furnace of affliction.

But all the satisfaction attendant upon the closing of this year is not of such ethereal quality. There is much material cause for rejoicing. There are improvements in industry, in agriculture, in the economy, and actually by the neck.

As recently as six months ago, the British people regarded the prospect of a year of great apprehension. Even the military command regarded against hope that the German would invade the British Isles.

Today that situation is entirely changed. Britain is so confident of herself that the invasion rumor which passes without substantiation is a situation that can be faced and met by the British Isles.

The British soldier is no more of himself and his platoon in a sure sign of the change. Today that situation is entirely changed. Britain is so confident of herself that the invasion rumor which passes without substantiation is a situation that can be faced and met by the British Isles.

Side Glances

The life of the year 1940 is moving turbulently towards its close. In this year, with all its turbulence, its threats and its dangers, the people of the British Empire can look back over a century length with considerable satisfaction.

For no matter what this fateful year may have taken in lives and property, it represents a remarkable record of conquest made by the human will and spirit over the darkest of circumstances and the most dismal of prospects.

From the triumph of a spiritual achievement and so far as we know, this has been the most triumphant year in the history of the British Empire. The year has been, of course, where the victories of the race have been more concrete and apparent. Enemies have been words which these have been enemies of the flesh. During 1940 the people of Great Britain have put behind them fear, apprehension and doubt. They have fought, they have suffered, and sudden death. In all the annals of heroism, there has been no record of conquest like this.

The British are a race reborn in fire, refined in the furnace of affliction.

But all the satisfaction attendant upon the closing of this year is not of such ethereal quality. There is much material cause for rejoicing. There are improvements in industry, in agriculture, in the economy, and actually by the neck.

As recently as six months ago, the British people regarded the prospect of a year of great apprehension. Even the military command regarded against hope that the German would invade the British Isles.

Today that situation is entirely changed. Britain is so confident of herself that the invasion rumor which passes without substantiation is a situation that can be faced and met by the British Isles.

The Passing Show

By J. S. Cowper

What becomes of the especially gifted child when he gets out into the workaday world? Does he advance to positions of honor and distinction? Or does he become a failure? The answer is not always the same. It depends on the child, on the environment, and on the opportunities that are offered to him.

Some children are born with a special talent. They are gifted with a natural ability that sets them apart from the rest of the world. They are the "chosen ones" of the gods, the "prodigies" of the age.

But not all children are born with a special talent. Some are born with a natural ability that sets them apart from the rest of the world. They are the "chosen ones" of the gods, the "prodigies" of the age.

to their feelings to look at the fire-breathing paper-hanger had audience seen the light and become a candidate for salvation. If the former Kaiser Wilhelm could put on the cloak of the Moslems to please the Turks in the last war, Adolf Hitler could even become a Christian to appease the souls of his Italian allies.

Certainly such a phenomenon would not new here, but the harassed troops of Il Duce. After fantasizing such an amazing transformation, they could almost bring themselves to believe in the miracle of an Italian victory.

Seriously though, if this pretended respect for Christmas was aimed at the Italians, it had one of two purposes.

It was either an admission that Italian morale is in an exceedingly bad way and requires some kind of artificial jolt from Hitler or it indicated an intention of softening the blow should Hitler decide to conquer Italy.

The depressed Italians might even be a Christian deity even if of foreign blood. The church would permit them to submit to a false peace.

Whether the answer to this middle of the Christmas truce must be, it is certain to have something to do with the religious, and the religious against the brutality and bloodiness of Nazi behavior.

The conscience of plain people cannot be smothered and outraged forever. It is as plain as it can be that that conscience is stirring restlessly somewhere between the formidable blood-and-onion construction of the German Reich.

I don't wish to harp on the phenomenon of the impromptu Christmas truce, but I believe it to be important in indicating the change that has taken place in Hitler.

Hitler did not observe the true of his own desire. Nothing would have delighted his heathen heart more than to have killed every life out of England during the celebration of the birthday of the Father of Peace.

Whatever prompted him to observe it was something outside himself, some necessity for pleasing the multitude of men and women people inside or outside of his own country.

In other words it was a bow-hill first bow to the public opinion.

Now this is an interesting thing, a most significant aspect in the gradual transformation of Hitler from an amply conqueror into just another man.

For Hitler, the great Hitler, has always maintained that public opinion did not exist; that it was no more than the synthetic creation of the effete democracies.

In his silly book he repeats time and time again that the real ruler has nothing to do with the will or opinions of the people. The only will the public can have is the will of their leader. The only opinion they are permitted to cherish is just exactly what the leader graciously permits them to hold.

And then he goes and defers to somebody's opinion that Christmas should be respected.

This is not the Hitler of a year ago. This is the Hitler who has been up to his ears in the blood of his own people. This is the Hitler who has been up to his ears in the blood of his own people.

I seem to have heard it mentioned, somewhere, that in a few days we are going to get ourselves a brand new year.

To be thoroughly practical about it, I suppose there is not a great deal of sense about this hallowing of the day.

The first day of the year commemorates nothing, celebrates the birth or death of no great figure in history, marks the anniversary of no important event.

It is merely an arbitrary line.

fixed by chronologists between two divisions in time.

Yet the celebration of the New Year is a valuable thing if for no other than a psychological reason.

It is one of the rules of behavior that if you are going to effect any change in your way of life, you have to have some sort of a time peg to hang them on.

For instance, if a fellow prinks himself he's going to quit drinking or smoking—although it can't be the life of no one who should be able to just make this promise without setting a date to it. There must be some exact point in time where he makes his pledge.

The New Year is useful in facing a sharp dividing line between that which is damned and that which is divine.

It is useful also in setting a goal for penitence. I don't think there are many honest folk who can look back over their record for the year without some regret and in some cases even a thrill of horror.

There is a sense for taking stock of ourselves and for expressing the proper amount of dismay over the muddy condition of our immortal souls.

I might be asked with good reason, if this is a time for self-examination and penitence, we should give vent to such hilarity and merriment as we feel.

Now, when I have heard it mentioned, somewhere, that in a few days we are going to get ourselves a brand new year.

To be thoroughly practical about it, I suppose there is not a great deal of sense about this hallowing of the day.

The first day of the year commemorates nothing, celebrates the birth or death of no great figure in history, marks the anniversary of no important event.

And the beginning of all progress is a dream.

What we imagine today, we prove tomorrow.

A first we dream; next we think; and then we do.

Our first dream is the first materialization of creation. There must have been one day when the famous first seven in which God somewhere in the balmy air of Heaven, sat by Himself and brooded of a world.

A New Year resolution is a dream. It is by dreaming that we come to the final answer that we must not be blind and aimless business, not all a hopeless waste and confusion.

This subject of preventing tuberculosis should be of vital interest to every family, and every family in which there are young adults below the age of twenty-five. Children appear to have less resistance to this infectious disease than adults, and therefore should be given special protection against exposure.

Between the years of fifteen and twenty-five we find tuberculosis of the lungs to occur with the greatest frequency, and it is therefore important to be on guard against acquiring this time. CHRISTMAS RUSH

By TOM HORNER

Yesterday: The family dinner. Valerie really has an attractive personality, welcome her into the living room. At an "engagement party" the doctor announced he had found a son for Jerry at $25 a week, and a little house for the new bride, Jerry is happy. Valerie is obviously disturbed. That salary won't even buy her clothes.

CHAPTER VII

VAL will understand after I talk to her tomorrow. Jerry told his father at his last before the dying fire. "All this has come rather sudden. It will take a little time for her to get her feet on the ground. But you can count on Val. I'm sure of that. Dad, isn't she wonderful?"

Hugh Connolly nodded, puffed his pipe in silence. They were alone, Mary had led Valerie upstairs, to stay in the guest room. Mary had moved in with the twins for the night. Valerie might have preferred to perhaps to continue the discussion of finances that had precipitated a quarrel—but Mary had been insistent, suggesting that Jerry might enjoy "man-talk" with his father. And since Jerry did not object—

"Yes, you don't have to worry about Val," Jerry continued. "I'll be difficult for her for a while, getting used to living on a salary—my salary—but we'll make it. She has never been taught to economize. Her father and mother have lots of money, and Val is an only child. Why, Dad, her special big money allowance at school is more than my salary will be."

"You won't be able to support that big car," the doctor suggested. "I'll keep it, since it belongs to Val," Jerry agreed. "But I can take to work, and we won't be going out much."

"Your mother and I will buy you a share in a car, but the one we gave you and the girls for Christmas will give you a little cash. There will be a lot to watch the money, though, Jerry. Once you're married you've got to be very careful. You'll have to budget every dollar. Your insurance is all paid for a year, at least. So you don't have to worry about that."

"Gee, Dad, there's a lot more to think about when you get married than just finding the right girl, isn't there?"

"That is, now—a lot more to think about."

The house on Front street was everything the doctor had predicted. It was a nice, comfortable little house in the best residential district in town, but it was entirely acceptable. Most of the weathered family lives lived further west, but in other ways it was a little different. The owner was waiting for them when they arrived, the doctor and his wife in Dr. Connolly's car, the twins in their Christmas present, Mary, Valerie and Jerry. Valerie's coupe, Mary had not wanted to come but Valerie would not let her say again. In fact, Valerie seemed to cling to Mary as they sat against the family.

It was strange that she should choose her first love in her character, but it might have been that she felt a common bond in the Connolly inner circle. At any rate, Mary was definitely on Valerie's side, whether she realized it or not. And if she did not like it, it did not reveal it.

"It's adorable," Mary murmured as they entered the cottage. "Val, you love it. It's a dream house."

Val refused to be impressed. "It's so small—so crowded."

"But we won't have much furniture, at first," Jerry reminded her. "And no dining room."

"There's hardly room to turn around in the kitchen."

"You'll never see someone here, not like you would in a big house."

"Our first apartment" was over a store," Martha recalled, laughing. "Can you ever forget it, Hugh? Your office in the front, and the kitchen and bedroom in the back. I had to get bed every time Hugh had a patient."

"Which meant often," Hugh added.

"You should have seen our quarters in the Broad street in China," Mary put in. "Shanghai was all right, but when Daddy was ordered up the river—and Bill and I refused to stay in the city alone. All the discomforts of a home."

The owner led them downstairs. "Nice furnace... plenty of laundry space."

"You'll have plenty of chances to get acquainted with this furnace," Jerry said. Dr. Connolly said, "And you, too, Valerie. Place should be hard to beat, though."

Valerie halted on the stairway, started down into the basement. A furnace, a hot water laundry, and a rooming board.

The voice of the owner ground on, in a singing monotone. "Nice location, too. Off the main trunk, direct to the laundry. Plenty of place to play, and not much danger of automobiles. Soon get used to the train. Of course, they're a good four

Many people believe that slave-driving was very profitable for the plantation owners of the Southern States in America prior to the Civil War, but this is not generally true. Actually slave labor was more expensive than free-man's labor. Benjamin Franklin once pointed out that if the original cost of a slave were added to the keep, insurance, doctor bills, and other costs of the slave, that it would be more expensive than hiring a free man. Slave labor was definitely wasteful in the South before the Civil War, for the simple reason that it was becoming less and less profitable.

POLICEMAN HAS CIVILIS TAKEN DURING SERMON

When a policeman has something punched on him it is something like the case of the man who had the dog. When the article interfered with the dog, it was sufficient to cause an arching of brows at the novelty of the situation.

But when the dark deed is done to the policeman, when he is at church on the Sabbath morning, well then that is just what the police in things as they should be.

A member of the band R.C.M.P. had all of these unusual and humiliating things happen to him on Sunday morning as he attended service.

Police, both city and R.C.M.P., are looking for the missing garments, which are of civilian type, but not uniform.
